Q. 3 Read the following passage carefully and answer the questions that follow in your own words.

It is never too late to learn. The day we die, we stop learning. To live is to keep learning, and the more we learn, the more we are alive. Learning keeps our minds and senses more alert. It is from this perspective that we need to view adult education.

In the Indian context, adult education can broadly be divided into two categories: the education for illiterate adults, and the education for educated adults who wish to resume their education after an interval. It is unfortunate that successive Indian governments were unable to introduce free and compulsory education in the country in line with the Directive Principles of state policy embodied in our constitution. As a result, large sections of our adult population today remain illiterate.

Researchers have found a close correlation between illiteracy and such problems as poverty, functional inefficiency, poor sanitation, early marriages and over-population. It may also be added that genuine, meaningful democracy requires a literate and educated citizenry. Knowledge has grown so fast and is increasing at such a rapid pace that there are circumstances when adult education becomes a professionally desirable requirement.

Adults are more prone to having formed bad learning habits that are difficult to get rid of because they have existed for a long, long time. However that may be, is it not wonderful that we live in a world where more and more people, both young and old, are learners? Surely, that is the best way forward to a better world.
